ALEXANDRIA GAZETTE AND VIRGINIA ADVERTISER (FOR THE COUNTRY.)

THURSDAYS and SATURDAYS, at $6 per annum-payable in advance. GEN. CHANGARNIER-HIS SERVICES AND BRAVERY IN THE AFRICAN CAMPAIGNS. -The French papers, says the Pail Mail Gazetic, have parrated the meeting of Changarnier with the Emperor Napoleon, and few can help teing touched by the description of the old Gen eral of 78 years of age tendering his advice and his sword, when his country is in danger, to the man whom, politically and privately, he must hitherto have viewed with intense dislike. Changarnier was one of the officers of the old Algerian army; he had seen the French eagles pushed forward from the seacoast to the oases of the Sahara; he had served as a comrade of the Prince of the House of Orleans, and with Lamorciere and Cavaignac had won Lis fame in the compaign against Abd-el Kaderi It is curious and instructive to look back on the early life of so excellent an officer, and to notice how the qualities which he display d when in high command were equally remark able when in charge of small bodies of troops. It was in 1835, thirty five years ago, when Abd el Kader was yet only the chief of a few Arabs, that Changarnier took part in the expedition against Mascars. The French arms had been successfu; but unprovided with the requisite supplies, the troops were forced to retreat over a barren and mountainous coun try to Orac. Each soldier had been served out with rations for the march, holding a small sack of rice in reserve. Provisions failed, and recourse was had to the reserve supply; but the troops, young, unused to war, and thoughtless of the future, had squandered all their rations, , including the bag of rice. One battalion only had preserved theirs intact, and this was the Second Leger, commanded by Captain Chan to command men, and how to preserve discip line under circumstances which test to the utmost the military qualities of soldiers. Again, in 1836, when the French army under Marshal Clauzet had failed in its attack on Constantine, when, pressed by the garrison from the city, harassed by the Arab horsemen of the sur scunding country, perishing from coid and hunger, the remnants of the expeditionary force were retreating toward Bone, Changar nier distinguished himself. He commanded the rear guard, which had been thrown out in skirmishing order, and which was composed of the remnants, 250 men, of the Second Le ger. The Arab borseman had already charged them, and had sabred many, when Changaroier formed square. The Mahomedan cavalry, excited by the slaughter of the Christians, and holding in disdain so small a body, swooped down on them, looking for an easy conquest. Changarnier waited until they had approached within twenty five yards of the face of the square, and then calling to his men, said, "You see those fellows there, they are 6.000, we are 250, so the sides are about equal. Vive le Roi! Fire!" The men fired steadily, the front of the faces of the square was strew ed thickly with men and horses dying or dead. The battalion collected its wounded, and, hav ing given so severe a lesson to the enemy, pursued its retreat unmolested. After this action Changarnier's name stood high in the estima tion of the Aigerian army, and he rose by successive steps until, in 1848, he commanded the troops in Algeria. Few of his old compads now remain. Cavaignae died in 1857. Lam orciere in 1865. Montauban, Count de Palikao, still serves, although at present in a civil capacity, while the Princes of the House of Orleans, whose names were equally known and respected in the old Algerian army, in vain solicit at this crisis of their country's fate

A MILITARY PARALLEL, 1814-1870.—The London Daily Telegraph thus contrasts the present minitary situation with the close of the campaign of 1814:

permission to draw their swords in her defence and again to cast in their lot with their comrades of former wars. Whatever may bothe result of the present awfulstruggle, Changarnier's name will be respected through out the French service, and his career wil be quoted as an example of the gallantry and soldierly qualities of the old Algerian

"In the campaign of 1814 the headquarters of Napoleon 1. were first fixed at Chaons; there, acting upon his interior lines, he struck his blow- right and left at Schwariz oberg and at Bucher, in the glorious retreat through Champagne. It must be borne in mind, however, that in 1814 the French armies were to tally exhausted. Marsha's who had commanded corps of 100,000 men found themselves at the head of one tenth of their former force; and the youths who pressed into the old cadress and died bravely at Brienne and La Rothiere, were very much what the present levee en masse might turnish, if it could be carried out in time to stop the resolute invader. But in 1814 the enemy had already turned the French position, and advanced deep into the country, before he could be checked; the lines of the Vosg. s, of the Moselle, and of the Meuse had been abardoned without a blow; 200 000 Prus stans, Austrians, and Russians, converging from Coble biz on the north and from Geneva on the sourt, had made it simply impossible that the 80 000 men whom at the u-most Na poleon could command, should do more than fight a good retreating battle toward Paris."

NOVELTY AT A HOTEL. - There is a novely in the way of attendance at the Pacific House, White Mountains. The tab e girls are said to be mostly schoolteachers, who enlist for the service during vacation "for variety and to see a little ile." What an uespeakable improvement on the traditional "John." Some of these fair ministers are reported to be prodigies of good looks, and one specially is so beautitul exceedingly that all the gentlemen leave their dinners untouched to gaze upon her. Perhaps the sly dog of a landlord thought of this, and perhaps he didn't ; but we must say that it seems suspicious. Moreover, we pre sume that the amateur assistants don't expect haif a dollar for bringing one a good cut of beet or an early slice of towl. It would be below their dignity. A charming arrangement altogether. - N. Y. Tribune.
